Producer's Role

There are multiple duties that every person in film has to be familiar with, but one of the most important ones in film is the producer. It's similar to the director. Think of the producer as the second in command to the person responsible for the entire movie. The producers have complete autonomy and authority over every single task that goes into a film's production. Their main priority overall is to make sure the crew, talent, and extras are in an environment where everyone can mesh well together. Now sometimes issues with people can occur of course, and it doesn't always work, but it's the producers job to manage every person, as well as making sure everything behind the scenes is in order.
