Looking back over the events of the weeks, and the work I and others did I do look at ups and down. As for during the shoot itself I remember very little about that day in all honesty as it all seemed like a blur now.

Leading up to it I really enjoyed, and am proud of the location I was able to use. We spent a day driving around looking at different historical locations as I tried to see which would be best. Moving forward I believe scouting locations is a role I would enjoy quite a bit.

I just enjoyed every part of that day, and felt my assessment of each location was well done. I had taken notes, and filmed for testing of lighting, traffic, noise and other variables.

One thing I wish I had play out differently deals with the equipment itself. I was limited in the way of lighting, and microphones.

My equipment was comprised of a lapel mic, a camera, a photography lights, and multiple tripods. This being said I do feel I did my best with what I had available to me.

Another issue I had was the aspect of lighting. As I mentioned before I only really had a few major lighting equipment I really had. This in the fact that I was filming in a home that has changed little since the 1930's and this makes for very difficult lighting.

The home was filled with natural light from the rising sun at 10:30, and spent the first hour being paranoid about every little stray sun ray. After some time I began to realize hoe futile it was and realized there was only so much I could do for this.

That is one thing I will focus much more on this next time I film or am on a crew, the lighting. Its one of those Rookie things that I didn't think about as much as other aspects. But I am glad that I learned that this early on rather than later.

I think I did well with scheduling. I was able to get myself to the location before anyone else arrived, and everyone else arrived on time which I was very pleased and impressed with. So moving forward I hope to be able to achieve similar punctual timing.

All in all, looking back I think of quite a few things I want to focus more on next time. And hopefully make it even better.
