

Halfast

Halfast is a adventure comedy about David Lane, a man wanting to move up the chain in government is stuck as a job of being a crime scene investigator. In an unexpected turn of events during his campaign, David hits and kills someone while driving, and decides to cover up the murder.

David has always dreamed of being seen as someone of importance, a role model to others. Without his drive to run for an official office David finds himself with a family and a job as a crime scene investigator. David decides to take his goals and make them real when he comes to realization he hasn't succeeded in his own eyes. Things are running smoothly on the campaign trail until David hits a literal bump in the road. Maybe his whole life has come to this moment, he has to put his investigator skills to the test by covering up the body, so he drives into the woods to dispose of it. Well he didn't do a good job at that.

Deep in the woods he thinks he's in the clear until the car doesn't start and he hears a rustling in the back of his car. He comes to find the person lived. The good news is that he didn't actually murder someone, but now has to convince this person from telling the public eye, or he can kill them for real.

Will David half-ass convincing his victim to keep quiet. Will he actually kill him? Is this a romantic comedy? Will this stranger redeem him or maybe kill him instead? Only time can tell on their journey back to civilization.
