

1. He shot his first film using a series of still photographs to create the motion of a horse running on the screen. He had a bet with a friend that he could project this.
2. Synchronization affected the film industry because sound changed everything and now filmmakers had more tools to use to make their films.
3. The Golden Age of Hollywood ended mainly because of the advent of television after the war.
4. The French New Wave was a great influencer on American filmmakers as they were popular in the 1960's.
5. Genre is important because it defines what your film is going to be about. It is a way to categorize films into themes/stories of similar types.
6. Drama is serious acting. Comedy is acting to try and instill laughter in the audience.
7. Romance films always show the protagonist going through pain and rejection initially because that sets up a journey for the protagonist to find their one and only, and when they do, the impact of the moment is much stronger on film and the audiences empathize more with the protagonist having witnessed his prior failures.

Note: I already completed this quiz ages ago. Its not in the records so im doing an abridged version. The history of film is in my soul. If you need more information I can write a dense novel on the history of film encompassing everything from the inception of the medium to 2018.
