Genre Mashing Question

The Earth is about to become completely depleted from its major resource, petroleum. Mission B25 Excelsior is about to commence in the depths of the Milky Way galaxy in order to begin our move to a new planet. A team of seven diverse specialists are our hope in reaching the said planet, and starting the first steps to creating a habitable home.

Megan, the environmental biologist is just coming off a tough divorce and is seemingly feeling comfortable with Jake, the captain. Jake, oblivious to Megan and her thoughts, begins to feel more and more attached to her as the journey continues. Neither realize their full potential in feelings for one another until their mission takes a disastrous turn.

They make it to the planet only to find a similar landscape that seems to be De Ja Vu. Pyramids, great statues of falcon headed felines, sand for miles and miles, and people draped in gold. It is the Egyptians! The travelers feel they are in trouble as the suspense builds up as they approach closer to one of the massive pyramids. A soldier looking man standing at the bottom of one of the ladders spots them. He shouts at them to come over. Completely ready for anything, Jake makes his way over with his fist clenched and weapon ready to be pulled. The soldier looks at him and smiles. He says " Hey we're throwing this big party in a little while here in the pyramid, you guys should join! It's to celebrate independence day!"

So the night progresses and they all go into this massive pyramid that is completely opposite on the inside. It is a massive club with waterfalls, neon lights, electronic music, and drinks galore. The crew has such a good time that they end up just staying on the planet with no contact to Earth. The new planet is exactly the same with the same types of people and organisms so it as if they had never left.
